NRC ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON REACTOR SAFEGUARDS APPOINTS NEW MEMBER

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has appointed Stephen P. Schultz to the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards (ACRS) for a four-year term.

Schultz is a nuclear engineering consultant in Charlotte, N.C., having retired from Duke Energy Corporation after 33 years of leading technical engineering services teams in the nuclear utility business. As a consultant to the International Atomic Energy Agency, he developed guidance on reactor technology assessment and selection for near-term deployment. Schultz has provided industry technical leadership on task force and working group initiatives, and committees for the Nuclear Energy Institute and the Electric Power Research Institute. He is a registered professional engineer in North Carolina and a lifetime member of the American Nuclear Society.

Schultz earned his Bachelor of Science degree in Engineering from Harvey Mudd College, his Master of Science degree in Nuclear Science and Engineering from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and his Doctor of Science degree in Nuclear Engineering from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He also completed his Master of Business Administration at Northeastern University.

The other members of the ACRS include:

- J. Sam Armijo, chairman, adjunct professor of materials science and engineering at the University of Nevada, Reno
- John W. Stetkar, vice chairman, principal of Stetkar and Associates, Lake Forest, Calif.
- Harold Ray, member-at-large, retired chief executive vice president of Southern California Edison Company, Rosemead, Calif.
