NRC Names Maureen Wylie New Chief Financial Officer

Nuclear Regulatory Commission Chairman Allison Macfarlane has named long-time government financial manager Maureen Wylie as Chief Financial Officer. She will join the NRC July 27. Wylie is assuming the position previously held by James Dyer, who retired from the NRC in May with 35 years of federal service.

Before her new appointment, Wylie spent 10 years at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), including in the position of Chief Financial Officer from 2004 to 2012. Most recently, she served as Chief, Resource and Operations Management, the principal executive for NOAA's corporate services. During her time at NOAA, Wylie received the Presidential Distinguished Executive Rank Award in 2009 and a 2011 NOAA Administrator's Award.

"We are happy to welcome Maureen to our team," said Macfarlane. "Her deep and rich government resources and facilities management experience will serve the NRC well."

Previously, Wylie worked nearly 20 years as a civilian employee of the Army. She held the position of chief financial officer for the Army National Guard from 2002 to 2004, and a number of other positions involving resource and facilities management, and base realignment and closure. Wylie began her government service in 1985 as an Army Presidential Management Intern. She has received a number of awards and honors over the course of her career.

Wylie graduated with honors from Rutgers University with a bachelor's degree in political science and from Yale University with a master's degree in international relations. She is also a 1999 Distinguished Graduate of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, National Defense University, with a master's degree in national security resource strategy.
